

This driver in Halifax County is transporting sweet potatoes that have just been harvested from a nearby field. Old school buses are often converted into flatbed trucks and are used to transport crops to warehouses or to local markets.

Converted school buses are a common sight in rural eastern North Carolina as farmers make use of every resource available to them to get their crops to market.